Protecting value and maintaining relationships

- Negotiating breakdowns in family and commercial trust disputes
- Resolving complex issues
- A steady hand protecting value amidst conflict

The breakdown in relations between parties to a trust, whether structured for a family or on a corporate basis, can leave current service providers either conflicted or unable to act with the necessary conviction in order to protect the value of the trust's assets and interests of the beneficiaries.

Our professionals are routinely instructed to bring their expertise in dispute resolution to a variety of trust scenarios. These range from family or corporate disputes, to litigation, white collar crime and money laundering allegations, regulatory infractions and proprietary tracing disputes.

By introducing our experienced professionals into the equation, who are objective and free from conflict or the involvement in prior disputes, measures can be taken to begin the resolution of what are often very sensitive situations.

When such disputes create a commercially unattractive environment for incumbent service providers, it can be essential to install an objective and independent fiduciary partner to actively manage the trust assets and protect value for all stakeholders.
